A new report in Transportation Journal lists Iowa State seventh in the world for “publication productivity in the Supply Chain Management discipline” from 2011-2013.

The study, conducted during three-year periods, listed Iowa State as 16th for the 2008-2010 period. The rankings are based on the number of publications each institution produced in the top six supply chain management and logistics journals.

“Iowa State is the only college or university in Iowa that offers a supply chain management degree, so we are excited to grow in this area,” College of Business Raisbeck Endowed Dean, David Spalding said.

The Iowa State University College of Business ranks 51st among public business programs in the country. The College offers a wide variety of programs to maximize student potential, connects students with professionals through case competitions, interactive learning, study abroad, internships and ultimately successful employment.
